TO THE FREEHOLDERS OF PRINCE WILLIAM, LOUDOUN AND FAIRFAX.

To scan the merits of Gentlemen who sue for public distinction through the suffrage of the people, is the undoubted right of freemen; to use this right moderately, calmly, and politely is the pride of Virginians. I will not detain you by ample remarks on the relative pretensions of Charles Fenton Mercer, Esq. and Gen. Armistead T. Mason as candidates for Congress; but will content myself with illustrating their political characters by their own plans and language on a subject of a highly interesting nature and one which affects the rights of every man.

In one column below you will see propositions of Mr. Mercer to amend the militia laws of Virginia at the last session of the Assembly; in the other the propositions made by Gen. Mason in the Senate of the U. States to alter the militia laws of the United States. These acts furnish their own comments and elucidations, and will enable you to form some estimate of the views of their authors.

During the war an act of assembly passed containing a hasty provision for treating as deserters men called out into service, even though never in service, provided they did not obey the call. Session before last Mr. Mercer attempted its repeal and failed; he renewed the attempt last session in the way disclosed below and succeeded in the house of delegates of which he was a member, but the Senate refused its sanction.

You perceive Gen. Mason's amendment, which miscarried, thank God, provided that if a man was called out and failed to go by himself or by substitute he was to be considered as a deserter and treated accordingly. A deserter is liable to be shot. The old law in force in the time of Washington, subjected a man who was called out and failed to go to a fine of 80 dollars or 100 dollars. Why change it? The country had flourished under it, it had suited us in peace, and had stood the tug of war. By Washington's Law a man must have been a soldier before he could have been a deserter, and until he went to the place of rendezvous he was a citizen.

Not Gen. Varnum and Gen. Mason, not content with a regulation so wholesome, attempted to make a man a deserter before he ever saw the camp, that is, as I take it, to make him a runaway from a camp where he had never been and dealt with him accordingly. A man a deserter and liable to be tried for his life, who is peaceable at home, perhaps sick!! This project exposed the citizen to unnecessary impositions and vexations and may be fairly pronounced arbitrary in the highest degree. It came out in Spring 1866, about a year or two after you had so freely spilt your blood and lavished your money in defence of your beloved country. How ill timed, how ill judged!

Fellow citizens, read the propositions of both gentlemen, and both are certainly very respectable gentlemen, and say, not as party men, but as Americans, as enlightened and temperate freemen, for whom you will vote?

To that portion of the community conscientiously scrupulous as to bearing arms, the meek and pious disciples of Wm. Penn, what shall I say? Any petty officer is to judge of your ability to pay, and to make for you your bargain for not more than 500 dollars. Many militia officers are reasonable men; but others are too much influenced by their passions, and the wanton pride of their commissions and epaulets. What kind of bargain do you believe they would make for you? The utmost limit of the law would be their only limit, you would then, in all probability, have to pay 500 dollars for a single tour, and your officer to be the judge whether you are able or not. He is first to make the bargain for you, secondly to be the only judge of your affairs, to appraise your estate for you, and last of all, if he determined you unable to pay, force you to war, not to fight, but to perform any other service. You are to drive the waggon, hand the cartridges, I presume to purify the camp of its filth, to toil in the ditch, and to curry and bring out the war horse. In one word, as a punishment for your Christian fidelity, whilst subject to the discipline of the camp, so odious to you, you were to be its underlings, its menials, and to be the standing jest, the unpitied subject of derision.

It is said the friends of general Mason defend him by declaring that Gen. Varnum of Mass. introduced a bill vastly worse than general M's plan, and that Gen. M sought to ameliorate, to soften its rigor. Extraordinary defence! Suppose, Fellow citizens, general Varnum had proposed to sell the county of Loudoun to the king of France, or to have all the inhabitants of Fairfax and Prince William hung! Would you have been content with general Mason if he had moved to amend by merely leasing the county of Loudoun to the king of France for ninety nine years, and by sending the people of Prince William and Fairfax to the penitentiary! Would you not rather say, why Gen. Mason did not oppose those measures altogether and with all your might? Just so with this memorable militia bill; if Gen. Varnum's was worse than general M's, why not resist him, and scout the whole system? Fellow citizens if I misapprehend General M. I do all that he can demand, I furnish the means of my own correction. While I investigate his public conduct with freedom, I trust I shall not be accused of disingenuity, or suspected of a disposition to invade the sanctuary of his private conduct or reputation to which I am willing to pay a just and appropriate respect.

A disciple of Washington.

Mr. Mercer's remarks in the house of Delegates on the militia bill

The bill for amending the militia laws, being under consideration in the committee of the whole, Mr. Mercer, of Loudoun, addressed the committee, in substance as follows:

He said he had in his hand sundry amendments to the bill; but before he submitted them, he begged leave to premise a few observations on the general principles which they involve.

He had very early, he said directed his attention to the militia laws of the commonwealth, and had adopted the opinion that it was utterly vain to attempt to give military habits to a whole people, scattered over a tract of country so extensive as Virginia, and engaged in agricultural pursuits.

This opinion, he said was that of the able authors of the federalist, and of general Washington, who had proposed to select an efficient corps out of the whole mass of the people, and to leave the residue in the undisturbed enjoyment of their peaceful occupations. Under the influence of these impressions, Mr. Mercer said, he had early and zealously sought to produce a reformation of our present militia system, and had once the honor of submitting to the house of Delegates the memorial of four regiments of militia, in Fauquier and Loudoun, in behalf of such a reform. This memorial proposed to dispense with the present musters which occurring at long intervals of time from each other, impart a knowledge, if any, which is speedily forgotten, on a return of the militia to the business of common life; in the lieu of these, to encamp the youth of the country on the field for six days, in each year, within the limits of their battalion districts. The memorial, he said, had not met with the support of a single member of the house of Delegates; the bill, which he was permitted to prepare, in order to reduce its object to the necessary practical form, was printed, through the indulgence of the house, but the clerk informed him that there was not a copy of it at present in existence.

Mr. Mercer said that subsequent experience had satisfied him & that candour obliged him to acknowledge that the object which he had so zealously pursued was unattainable by the means which he had then devised. The period of six days would not suffice, he had since often seen, to give order to a militia camp in time of actual war, and the instructions to be acquired in so short a period was not worth the inconvenience of assembling the men who were to receive it. The duties, especially of the staff, of the adjutants, quarter masters and inspectors of a body of troops, so raw and inexperienced, could not be acquired in thrice the period which he had proposed; and the public sentiment was not prepared for a longer abstraction of the people from their daily occupations and their homes. He was glad that his once favorite measure had been rejected.

All, Mr. Mercer said, that he now hoped to see accomplished, in relation to the militia, was their proper organization in conformity with the laws of the United States; the instruction of the youth of the country at their primary schools, academies and colleges in military exercises, and the formation of officers capable of commanding them, when subsequently called into actual service, under the authority of the state, or general government. For the first object, the amendment which he held in his hand would amply provide; the second, he hoped would be attained by a prosecution of the plan of public education submitted to the house, by the president and directors of the Literary Fund.

The whole duty of a soldier on the field consists in facing wheeling and marching to the flank and front. Thus accomplished, they are fit instruments in the hands of competent officers for the performance of any evolutions whatever. The manual exercise is more a matter of military parade, than use; the fields and the forests teach our people the use of fire arms; and the recollections which we all have of the sports of our boyhood, must satisfy us that it taught the ordinary drill, at school, as holiday exercise, we shall not forget it in our manhood. We do not forget to dance to skate or to run.

For the third object Mr. Mercer said he looked with earnest solicitude, to the congress of the United States, who possessed sufficient resources for its attainment, in the command of the revenues of the country, whether capable of being extracted for public use, by direct or indirect taxation. Let the officers be collected for a short period of each year, in sufficient numbers, in convenient camps and taught all the military knowledge, that the science of the nation can impart to them. You will thus, also form a valuable staff for actual service; and Mr. Mercer added, that he presumed it was unnecessary to inform the committee, that nothing was more wanting at present in the militia, or more necessary to the efficacy of the army. He had seen men running about for several days, without knowing where to procure food for themselves or horses; and known many days, in deed several weeks to elapse, before the commanding officer of an army of militia knew the number or actual disposition of the force which he commanded.

Relying upon the means which he had pointed out to attain all that was practicable in relation to the two last objects of his present enquiry, Mr. M. begged leave to submit to the committee such an amendment to the present militia laws of the state, as would leave the first to be accomplished by retaining three only, of the present musters. One company muster, and the present battalion & regimental musters, with the drill of the officers. This amendment will dispense with three company musters, and computing the whole number of the militia of the commonwealth at 80,000 men, will save to the people 240,000 days labor, with all the incidental expenses attendant on the company musters. As a measure of political economy, it was recommended by the soundest policy, as it would augment the active and profitable industry of the country. It was the richest boon which the house could extend to the people, at the end of a long session and would be gratefully received by them; for there was not a man in the commonwealth, who could be of opinion that any real benefit had resulted from the company musters except in particular cases, for which the proposed amendment contains a provision leaving it to a majority of the company to augment within certain limits the number of their company musters.

While up, Mr. Mercer said he would consume a few minutes more, with the indulgence of the committee, in stating his reasons for offering another amendment to the bill, under consideration, upon which he would ask, however, that the sense of the committee might be separately taken. By this amendment he wished to restore the former penalty imposed by our militia laws for a failure to obey any draft upon the militia for actual services. This penalty had been prescribed by the laws of the U. S. and was a pecuniary fine of 80 dollars. By an act of the general Assembly, which passed at the close and in the fervor of the late war, this fine had been supplanted by the penalty of desertion. The history of this substitution, which would imply that the law had been before defective, or inoperative, was singular, as the substitution itself was ill judged and unnecessary. A bill came down to this house from the senate containing some thirty or 40 amendments, and according to the usage of the house, of which we had a very recent example in the hurry to pass the law farther suspending executions for debt, all these amendments were forthwith acted upon, and were enacted in less than as many minutes as they contained sections into Laws.

Mr. Mercer said he knew not that the amendments contained the provision which he now proposed to otherwise, in obedience to this act repeal, until he was told of it, on his for actual service, shall immediately return home. He denied the fact, & upon receiving order to rendezvous the law which he could not dispute was adduced to prove it; he offered at the last session of the house, an amendment in the very terms of that which he now held in his hand. It had been received by the house, with scarcely a dissentient voice; but being offered at a late period of the session, the bill which contained it was allowed from some cause or other, to sleep upon the clerk's table, until the final adjournment of the legislature.

Mr. Mercer said, that he regarded the change of the former law as an insult to the patriotism of the good people of this commonwealth, more than 60,000 of whom had been from time to time, called into the field, to the most horrible of all possible services; to encounter, not the sword of the enemy which they could honorably meet, but the pestilence which walketh in broad day, unseen, and shoots its arrows with fatal certainty in the darkness of midnight, and yet not a single instance of mutiny had disgraced the character of Virginia during the war. It was not just to increase the penalties of law already found to be efficient; severe punishments, by enlisting the sympathy of the people in behalf of the offender, defeat their own ends. Without the people, you can execute no law; they constitute your courts martial, as well as your civil tribunals; they are your judges as well as your jurors, and laws from which their feelings revolt, will ever be found on the statute book to be a dead letter.

Let us, said Mr. M. repeal this odious provision in our present state of profound tranquility and peace, least on the recurrence of another war, the subject should acquire a factious consequence, from the imagined danger of the country, and the feelings of party be enlisted against the claims both of expediency, which is ever temperate in pursuing, as well as moderate in devising the means of attaining its object, and of justice, which has not now to learn that "Inter arma silent leges."

Mr. M. then submitted to the committee his amendment in the following words.

Be it further enacted, That the several company musters now required by the militia laws of this Commonwealth, shall be and the same are hereby discontinued, and in lieu thereof, there shall be hereafter but one company muster in each year to be held on the and all persons bound by law to attend any company muster shall be subject to like fines, to be assessed, collected and accounted for in like manner with the fines which have been hitherto levied for a failure to attend the company muster hitherto required by law. Provided that any uniform or light company disposed to muster more frequently, may, by a majority of the members thereof prescribe any additional musters not exceeding it in any 1 year as the rule of their government, and such regulation entered of record in the regimental book of the regiment to which such company belongs or is attached by the clerk thereof; shall subject the members of such company to all the penalties for failure to attend any such muster as may be inflicted for failing to attend the single company muster required by this act.

Be it further enacted, That where ever any city in this commonwealth contains one or more battalions of militia, instead of the company muster herein required there shall be an additional battalion muster in each year to be held on such day as the commandant of the battalion shall appoint.

Be it further enacted, That so much to the 23d section of the act entitled an act to amend the militia laws of this commonwealth which passed the 18th of January, 1815 as inflicts the penalty of desertion upon any person who may fail to appear at any place of rendezvous preparatory to any draft, shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and in lieu of such penalty, the fine imposed for such offence, by the laws of this Commonwealth, shall be and the same is hereby revived.

Amendment of Gen. A. Mason of Va. introduced by him and printed for the use of the Senate on a Militia bill brought in by Gen. Varnum.

SECT. 11. And be it enacted, that every non commissioned officer, non-commissioned officer, or private, who shall have been detailed by draft or vision which he now proposed to otherwise, in obedience to this act repeal, until he was told of it, on his for actual service, shall immediately return home. He denied the fact, & upon receiving order to rendezvous or to join his detachment as detached service of the unit shall refuse to appear at the place of regimental rendezvous or join his corps, or to do by his superior detachment and shall substitute as shall provided, to perform duty, he shall be considered, & shall be accordingly. Provided, any non-commissioned officer or private of the United States, provisions of this act, shall be of right to furnish, but marches, or thereafter, an able belonging to the militia; if however, who shall offer a substitute unless he shall hold a similar rank with the non-commissioned musician who shall provided also, the private who shall this act, shall be of religious sects denominated or Dunk other religious sects and known religious members of the seriously scrupulous of he shall fail to comply with the requisites of this act, or by furnishing shall be lawful for manding the detachment hereby required for a substitute for his reasonable terms to his opinion such property sufficient to pay man contracted for, amount to be paid exceed $500. And for such substitute and recover the sum from such private to court of record in the city or district where provided ten days notice. And in case of being scrupulous of should not in the officer, possess sufficient property to hire according to the provisions such private if he substitute shall be in person and to serve capacity than that of ing arms.

FRIDAY, APRIL 4.

TO THE PUBLIC.

The Monthly Visitant, having now been in the hands of the public for a considerable season, must have given those who have been in the habit of reading it, an opportunity of forming a pretty correct estimate of its real value. Its object is instruction, combined with innocent amusement. And to effect this, while important, religious topics, are freely discussed, interesting anecdotes are never excluded. Many fugitive pieces, some of them of real interest and value, by being inserted here, are rescued from oblivion; and while it delights, specially, in religious intelligence, it is enriched, occasionally, with poetical pieces, and obituary notices.

The continuance of this work, is now depending, entirely, on increased encouragement. Unless the town be at the expense of publication, its future visits must be discontinued. The Editor is ready, and stands pledged to do his part, and hopes that the public will not be backward in doing theirs.

A person will in the course of a few days wait upon the citizens of Alexandria, Washington and Georgetown, for the purpose of soliciting their aid in the prosecution of the work, when it is not doubted the liberality of the religious part of the community, at least, will so far manifest itself as to prevent the disagreeable necessity of discontinuing the publication.

By a gentleman recently from Alabama, we are informed that the population of Monroe county exceeds ten thousand, nearly all of whom have removed to that country since the 1st of October, 1815, at which time the whole population of that county was not supposed to amount to five hundred; that in consequence of this rapid influx of inhabitants, and the incipient state of the settlement, provisions had become so scarce as to nearly threaten some of the most recent settlers with absolute starvation; but from this distressing situation they had sanguine hopes of being shortly relieved, as a number of the most respectable merchants of the neighborhood of the Alabama and Tombigby, together with some of the most opulent of the farmers of the latter place, had associated themselves for the purpose of procuring provisions from Tennessee; and several agents had been despatched, some for the purpose of forwarding provisions down the Mississippi, thence by Mobile, and up the rivers Tombigby and Alabama, and others for the purpose of forwarding waggons immediately by the way of Fort Deposit, Fort Jackson, &c. & that some of the waggons were expected to arrive about the 10th inst. Many families intending to move to that country have been compelled to stop on the frontiers of this state, and many have been compelled to return, after nearly reaching the place of their destination, in consequence of scarcity of provisions, which, through the Indian country, are not to be had on any terms, many of the Indians and half breeds having sold out so near as to threaten themselves and families with extreme want.

MEXICAN NEWS.

Extract of a letter from Colonel — in Gen. Mina's army, dated Galveston, January 31, 1817, to his friend in N. York, translated and communicated for the Columbian.

"Since my last, dated from Port au Prince, we have sailed for this place, situated in St. Bernard's Bay, where we have formed a junction with the spirited Commodore Aury. Our supplies are abundant, our artillery excellent, our cavalry well mounted on Indian horses, and all our men determined to conquer or die for the independence of their adopted country.—We have had to struggle against difficulties of all sorts—sickness, treason, and desertion. We had among us secret agents and assassins, whom I have detected. Our brave Gen. is safe, and ready to punish with his good broad sword the tyrants of the new world. You cannot imagine with what rapidity this place has grown.

On our landing there are only to be seen a few scattered huts—and now, 150 houses, raised as if by magic, offer for all sorts of accommodation. Taverns, coffee houses, billiard tables, shops, and trades of all sorts, are in operation, encircled by strong fortifications—and more than 20 men of war, who alternately go out to render the slaves of the tyrant tributaries of the wants of the friends of liberty.—Aury is governor of this place which he has created by his genius and enterprise."

REMARKS.

(We lament to learn, that these flattering hopes are blasted. The degenerate natives manifested no wish for independence; as men long enslaved, become reconciled to chains.—Letters received in town to day from New Orleans, announce the failure of gen. Mina's expedition. It is said he has put into the Mississippi.)

Extract of a letter to a Mercantile House in the city of N. York, dated

QUEBEC, March 20.

Our legislature intended to lay an embargo to prevent the export of wheat, but finding there would be a surplus of about 150,000 bushels, abandoned the idea.—There will be, if there is a demand, about 30,000 barrels of flour for exportation, besides what the Upper Province will supply. The price appears to have broke at $12, as several contracts have been made deliverable on the opening of the navigation; and that by government of 10,000 barrels, was taken at $12 50

CHARLESTON March 28.

We have much satisfaction in announcing the safety of the crew of the brig Jupiter, which went ashore on the bar last Monday morning. They were taken off by the smack sloop Liberty, capt. Chary, about sun rise yesterday morning, & arrived in town the same afternoon, six in number, including the captain. They had formed a determination on Tuesday night, of leaving the wreck in the long boat, having placed the vessel's papers, captain's and crew's baggage, &c. in her, when she parted her fast and drifted from along side, by the violence of the sea. They then constructed a raft, but thought it unsafe to venture upon it until the sea abated, when the sloop above mentioned, providentially went to their assistance.

Of the real character of the above vessel we have not been able to obtain any satisfactory information. Various speculations are afloat relative to her, among those persons who have been instrumental in saving her crew. They all agree however, that there are no Spaniards amongst them, although the vessel bore the Spanish flag. We hazard no opinion on the subject; but presume the captain, if he is on the spot, will see the necessity of clearing up the mystery in which the affair is wrapped.

It is believed that a greater part of the cargo, when the weather is entirely moderate, will be saved. The vessel will undoubtedly be lost.

The Paradise of Coquettes,
A ROMAN, in nine Parts.
A second edition of this elegant Poem is just published and for sale by the Subscribers.
The character of this Poem is thus given by the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviewers:—
The Paradise of Coquettes; A Poem, in nine Parts.
The character in which the poet professes to speak, is that of the POET OF WOMAN. He is supposed to be addressing woman, and woman only, and addressing her, 'on adventures of which she is the heroine, and on charms and graces, which it is the whole history of her beauty to have exercised with failure or success.'
His incontestable merits, and the assiduous care which he has bestowed upon the poem, deserve the warmest praise.
Quarterly Review, Oct. 1814.
We have here a little volume which may be fairly regarded as a prodigy in this age of quarto ballads, romances, heroics, and sentimental simplicity. It is by far the best and most brilliant imitation of Pope, that has appeared since the time of that great writer; with all his point, polish, and nicely balanced versification, as well as his sarcasm and witty malice. He is always at home—always lively and entertaining.
His satire is polished and yet pungent.
His versification, in particular, is almost invariably flowing & harmonious.
Edinburgh Review, Feb. 1815.
"A vein of polite irony runs through the 'Paradise of Coquettes' which was familiar to the writers of the age of Anne and George the First, but has been discarded in making other modern improvements, by our contemporaries."
James Kennedy & Son.
